The EB-5 Immigrant Investor Program offers foreign nationals permanent residency in the U.S., known as a green card, in exchange for a qualifying investment into an approved development project.

Green Card Benefits Overview

- Unrestricted employment options
- Greater chance for college admission
- Reduced college tuition
- Opportunity to travel freely
- Additional support throughout retirement
- Benefits for the entire household

There are multiple benefits to holding a U.S. green card.

Unrestricted Employment Options

Green Card Holders

-  Potential to work for a start-ups/smaller organizations not eligible for other visas
-  Freedom to seek a new employer without visa sponsorship concerns
-  No limit on employment geography
-  Ability to start your own business
-  Eligible for post-retirement benefits

Non-Green Card Holders

-  Forced to limit job search to larger, layered corporate organizations
-  Potentially forced to look for employment outside areas of interest
-  Geographic limitations when searching for employers
-  Required to consistently monitor changes in immigration rules
-  Security restrictions for non-citizens limits government employment opportunities

Green card holders can also seek a different employer without fear of losing visa sponsorship. Green card holders can even be self-employed and start their own business.

Greater Chance for College Admission

Applying to a university as a U.S. resident increases your odds of admission by 3.5x

College Admissions Percentage

With competition for international student spots at U.S. universities increasing, applying as a domestic applicant increases a student's chance of admission by 350%.
